Section A

Answer Question 1.

Participant observation is a method where researchers join the group being studied. This method not only allows the sociologist to observe people in their natural setting, but also to understand and feel things from their point of view. One issue to address is whether the research will use overt or covert observation. A key strength of participant observation is that it allows the sociologist to achieve a rich and detailed picture of the study group and obtain data that is high in validity.

Interpretivists are most likely to support the use of observation, which can be participant or non-participant. On the other hand, those who favour a positivist approach are critical of observation. They point to a number of ethical, practical and theoretical problems with observational methods.

- 1 (a) What is meant by the term covert observation? [2]
- (b) Describe two ethical issues with participant observation. [4]
- (c) Explain why interpretivists support the use of participant observation. [8]
- (d) Assess the strengths and limitations of non-participant observation. [11]

Section B

Answer either Question 2 or Question 3.

- 2 'Marxist theory continues to offer the most convincing account of how society works.' Explain and assess this view. [25]
- 3 'The aim of sociological research should be to help disadvantaged groups in society.' Explain and assess this view. [25]
